Stackable Desktop Storage by
Sam Hecht and Kim Colin, 2013

July 2018

Introduction

Formwork stackable desktop storage helps you bring order to your papers, tools, and artifacts. With shapes and sizes that were rigorously considered to relate an intuitive sense of utility, the accessories may be stacked and combined in any way you see fit.

Sam Hecht & Kim Colin

Balancing meticulous attention to details with a thoughtful consideration of context, Hecht and Colin created Formwork in varying permutations, allowing some items to be kept out of view, while others remain within reach, based on aesthetic considerations or frequency of use.

“Like most people, our lives are now a mixture of both the analog and the digital. We wanted to support this condition in a new line of stackable accessories we call Formwork.”

– Sam Hecht & Kim Colin

Formwork Pencil Cup

Hecht and Colin take great pleasure in everyday items, and few items are more everyday than the lowly pencil. In providing a place for these analog writing instruments, the designers thoughtfully included a ledge for smaller items, too, some certainly digital, such as a memory stick.

Formwork Small Tray

Hecht and Colin approached the design of Formwork by examining the items that populate our lives and our desks. In their design for the line's small and large trays, they gave each a cantilevered ledge to allow the placement of items in order of usefulness—giving you ready access to some things and letting you place others in the background.

Formwork Small Box

To account for the bulkier items that inevitably occupy surfaces at home and in the office, Hecht and Colin created boxes with removable lids. Each lid has a hole that accepts a removable cup. Or, the cup can be set in an indentation inside the box and under the hole for access to the cup's contents without having to remove the lid.

Formwork Tissue Box

Hecht and Colin's pragmatic design for a Tissue Box ensures that Formwork meets all the requirements of the modern desk, which in their estimation is "an amalgamation of not just the office, but also the kitchen, the workshop, and the bathroom."

Formwork Paper Tray

With so much emphasis on the digital, it is surprising how much paper still clutters desktops, kitchen counters, and workshops. Acknowledging that paper will always be with us, Hecht and Colin created Paper Trays that stand alone, and stack with other trays or Formwork elements. A gently sloped lip makes picking up the pieces easy.
